Who are you?

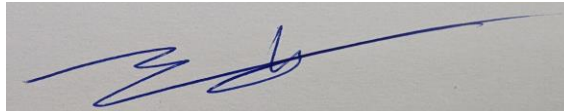

What do you want?

Years ago, I was glued to the TV during every episode of a science fiction series where these questions were asked as the philosophical essence of two opposing forces.

The writers hinted that perhaps focusing too much on the latter question may lead to unfortunate choices, so instead I would give a taste of the former.

I am patient, curious, passionate, honest, usually intelligent, and sometimes funny. I lead with empathy, and I subscribe to the Agile manifesto. When at work, I make people feel heard, productive, and like to point out the importance of what we do. My teams know they are high performers, and by knowing they become even more so. At home I go on 60-mile canoe trips with my son in the summers; and my daughter and I are a force in the kitchen where we interpret most recipes as vague guidance, after all I embrace failure and enjoy the learning opportunities from a good challenge.

I look forward to meeting you and hearing your stories.
Sincerely,

Corey H. Hart
